Major Headlines

WTI Oil Price Outlook: Can the Strait of Hormuz Push Crude Toward $100?

WTI climbed toward $94 per barrel on September 8, while Brent crude continued to move closer to the critical $100 threshold, as escalating U.S.-Iran tensions and growing concerns over shipping activity in the region intensified market uncertainty. More importantly, traders are increasingly pricing in the possibility of prolonged disruption rather than treating the current shock as a temporary event.

Gold Remains Subdued in the Short Term, but Long-Term Demand Stays Strong

Gold prices plunged below the $4,400 mark during the European session today. December gold futures also eased to $4,432. According to the latest reports, Yemen's Houthis have claimed responsibility for multiple attacks targeting Saudi Aramco's oil facilities. The escalation in geopolitical tensions has provided further upward momentum to oil prices.

Wall Street futures mixed after jobs data lifts Sept Fed hike odds

U.S. stock futures were mixed on Sunday evening, with investors weighing the prospect of tighter Federal Reserve policy after a stronger-than-expected August jobs report, while trading was expected to remain thin ahead of Monday's Labor Day holiday.

USD/JPY Price Forecast: Fresh downside leg expected below 155.00

The Japanese Yen (JPY) trades flat against the US Dollar (USD) at around 156.00 at the start of the week, but is close to its four-month low of 155.23. The pair is broadly firm due to JPY's last week's outperformance, which came on the back of hawkish commentary from Bank of Japan's (BoJ) board member Hajime Takata.

EUR/USD Price Forecast: Remains sticky to 20-day EMA

The Euro (EUR) is down 0.1% at around 1.1610 against the US Dollar (USD) during the European trading session on Tuesday. The major currency pair trades lower as the US Dollar turns positive after a weak start. At press time, the US Dollar Index (DXY), which gauges the Greenback's value against six major currencies, trades 0.1% higher at around 99.00.
